Aside from a reflection of the growing distance and difference between life here and abroad, the letter offers us a glimpse of the next generation of overseas Pinoys who will have fewer and fewer direct links to the homeland. # Entrepreneur takes on challenge to grow Vitamin C market

WITH POTENTIAL sales of some P150 billion annually, the local vitamins and supplements industry is robust and continues to rise with encouraging numbers.

"The market is wide enough for new players because of the growing consciousness of Filipinos about health. For instance, we have set a P200 million gross target for this year and we are positive that we will achieve this because all sectors of the society are becoming aware that they need to take care of their health more than anything," explains Yvonne Benavides, general manager of Mega C Health Ventures, Inc., one of the new players in the Vitamin C sector.

Mother of all vitamins

The dietary and nutritional supplement market generated $52 billion sales worldwide in 2010. Multivitamins make up a major portion of this market and grew almost 7.5 percent. Japan, which leads the nutritional and dietary supplement market in Asia, is also third largest player globally.

In the Philippines, although the sector is expected to increase sales with a compounded annual growth of three percent, a large chunk of the market remains untapped.

According to a food consumption survey conducted by the Food and Nutrition Research Institute of the Dept of Science and Technology (FNRI-DOST), Filipinos mostly rely on vegetables for their Vit. C requirements.

Vitamin supplements are perceived to be expensive. These days, manufacturers and distributors have become more aggressive in targeting low and middle income groups.

Vit. C is known to fight stress, boost the immune system, and maintain a healthy heart. Mega C takes it a few notches higher with two of its unique selling propositions. It is 100 percent all-natural Vitamin C in veggie capsules, so it dissolves and is absorbed by the body faster; and is only five pesos per capsule.

The trend towards marketing to the rational mass, healthier lifestyles, improvements in distribution and the increased use of celebrities to endorse brands are all working for Mega C, Benavides adds.

It is currently available thru distributors, direct sellers and drugstores.

Benavides is chair of the board and president of Hard Security Services, which deploys at least 3,000 security guards around the country. The 49-year-old entrepreneur is ready to take on the challenge.

"We are repositioning our brand through a new distribution model that would not only increase awareness but also promote a healthier lifestyle. There is wealth in health," says Benavides.

HR men turn to tech for training

CORPORATE training programs no longer entail a huge amount of effort, logistics, personnel, time and expense. These days, human resource managers and trainers can maximize the use of sophisticated technology to their advantage.

For Nilo Suarez, associate director for technical competency learning and resource development of Meralco Development Center (MDC), the most cost efficient and effective training is through an electronic learning (e-learning) course.

E-learning has evolved from the audio and videotape of the 1980s to the how-to video manuals on VHS, CD, and then DVD, according to Suarez.

With the Internet now more accessible and commercialized, more e-learning modules have become available online, enhancing the learning process and changing the way the delivery of lessons is made.

"The usual challenge of HR managers and trainers in large companies is how to effectively deliver standard training to a large group of employees scattered in various sites across the country," Suarez says.

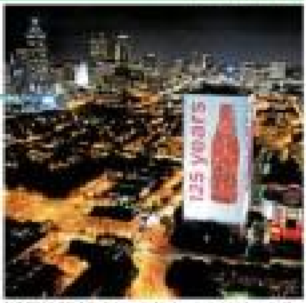

He notes that it generally takes an HR manager months to complete the training because of the time spent on traveling from one place to another, which also means a big company expense.

"Team coaching may be practiced to be able to reach more people in less time. However, this may affect the quality of training if you train and coaching styles are not standardized. Employees end up learning different 'versions'," he says.

MERALCO SEALS ENHANCED ePLDT SERVICES
ePLDT Ventus, Inc. signed a memorandum of agreement (MOA) with the Manila Electric Company (Meralco), enrolling the information and communications technology (ICT) arm of PLDT under Meralco's Customer Choice Program (CCP). Through the CCP, ePLDT will be shifting its electricity use to off-peak hours where power rates are lower. This will result in improved power utilization and cost efficiencies in ePLDT's operations. Sealing the agreement, which was held at the Meralco corporate headquarters in Ortigas Avenue, Pasig City are Meralco Senior Vice President and Customer Retail Services and Corporate Communication head Alfredo S. Panlilio and ePLDT President & CEO Rosh L. Lui (second and third from left). Also in photo are Meralco Vice President and Corporate Business Group head Victor S. # Chasing the 'butanding' after a memorable drive to Bicol

By Boying Santos-Viola
Contributor

IT HAS been over 30 years since I last traveled to Bicol. I can vaguely recall that I last went there on a business trip. The most familiar memories involved the cemented roadway with numerous partially collapsed segments, forcing one to slow down abruptly or end up with a flat tire if not with broken tire rod ends.

St. Paul's senior 'sexy-zens' visit Angkor Wat

TEN MEMBERS of the St. Paul College of Manila (SPCM) High School Class of 1967 recently visited the ruins of Angkor Wat near Siem Reap City in Cambodia, as well as Ho Chi Minh City in Vietnam.

The former colegialas in black and white checkered school uniforms who joined their latest annual get-together were Cecilia Conti Maraton, Lolita Cua Lim, Susan Dizon-Laurenda, Priscilla Enriquez, Carina Fernandez-Marasigan, Molly Gomez-Almanzor, Tesha Mendiolaman-Garcia, Lydia Pua-Sy, Rosa Rodriguez-Pelaez and Seneria Salonga-Olivar.

They were supposed to form the "Dirty Dozen" with Tina Ramos-Aquino and Carol Bueno-Rizzo, but the two couldn't make it at the last minute, leaving the rest of the group to go ahead as the "10 Little Indians."

The SPCM-HS '67 class is an active alumnae group, and getting them together is always a cinch, whether it's putting on a dance number from the '60s or doing a Lady Gaga.

Indeed, the senior citizens of SPCM HS class of '67 celebrate the joy of life in anything and everything.

Kabayao family plays beautiful music for Cebu

CEBU CEBU

Jaime Picornell

THE MARCO Polo Plaza Hotel, the Arts Council and the Gilopez Kabayao Foundation teamed up to present two memorable concerts and a book launch in Cebu. In concert were violin virtuoso Gilopez Kabayao, a legend in his own time, his wife, pianist Corazon Pineda Kabayao, and their daughters Guillerma and Farida, both very accomplished violinists.

The day was May 6. The first concert was scheduled at 2 p.m. at the Marco Polo's grand ballroom. This was an outreach event open to young people, but adults also came to enjoy the afternoon musicale. Arts Council president Pedro [illegible] was present, along with some trustees.

Expected were 500, but 600 came. "We had to add more chairs," said Marco Polo PR officer Aileen Quijano, who added that the audience was very responsive, enthusiastic and appreciative.

The program opened with Rebikov's "Perpetual Motion," followed by Bach's Concerto for Two Violins in D Minor (movements vivace and allegro). Next came "The Swan" by Saint-Saens, "Scherzo" from Mendelssohn's Trio in D Minor, and "Pampanga" by the Argentinian composer [illegible].

The second part featured "Nata Ka" by Ryan Cayabyab, "The Lord's Prayer" by Malotte and "Let Us Praise the Almighty" by Hilber.

Wonderful

After the performance, a lot of the children rushed to congratulate Gilopez and family, saying how wonderful it had all been. "The children would like to take up music lessons and band themselves into an orchestra, let's see what we can do," said Lianne Sala, who had coordinated the Kabayao's sojourn in Cebu.

Lianne is enthusiasm personified. Earlier, she had informed the public that proceeds from the donations of attendees would go a long way to help the Cebu-based Young Philharmonic of the Philippines wherein she plays the violin. She also makes regular trips to Iloilo for violin lessons with Gilopez.

By 6 p.m., Lianne was at the entrance to the Marco Polo's Manila Room, manning the reception counter. There was a display of CDs by the Kabayaos, and a tall pile of the book launched, titled "Notes for the Gilopez People—Gilopez Kabayao—the Philippines' Violin Virtuoso and Musical Crusader."

At a given moment Lianne was on the flower-decked dais to present the performing artists. Gilopez was nattily dressed in a dark suit. Corazon, Guillerma and Farida were elegantly gowned and jeweled.

Corazon, who edited the book and wrote the insights, said she had to sort boxes and boxes of photos since before Gilopez was born up to the present, as well as read reviews, clippings, mementos, etc. The result is a valuable documentation, not to mention [illegible].

The program started with "Largo" by Veracini, followed by the third and fourth movements from Mendelssohn's Trio Op. 49 in D Minor. Then came a solo rendition by Gilopez of "Scherzo Tarantelle" by Wieniawski, which caused the audience to render him a standing ovation. He played this piece in 1950 at his debut in Carnegie Hall, New York City, which gave him rave reviews.

Now 81, Gilopez plays with the same fire and dexterity, perhaps even with more passion. The concert went on with the family playing "Romance" by Rubinstein. Corazon warned that many would recognize it as what Frank Sinatra crooned with the title "If You Were Mine a Dream." Next line of the lyrics is "I hope I'd never waken..."

Gift of music

Our reunion with the Kabayao family continued as they played a medley by Hayes titled "Praises of Israel." Before that, Corazon had said that they had the gift of music, and that they use it to praise its giver—God. "Take stock of what gifts God has given you, and use them to praise Him," she said, while a baby in the audience cooed. "I'm glad you agree," she told the baby.

The audience was hushed when they played the familiar, "Pakiusap" by Santiago and duly livened up when they rendered Granados's "Danza Espanola" for the finale. It is a favorite of theirs, and more than a melody, it has a fun, lead rhythm that can be very demanding.

Flowers were presented as the audience stood to their feet to applaud. Gilopez spoke words of thanks, and to say "This has been quite an experience, as always, in Cebu. I don't feel 81. We will always remember today."

After the concert, Gilopez sat at a table to sign the book and it took a while as there was a long line, books in hand. There were also CDs to sign, specially the new release of his original 1950 concert in Carnegie Hall. Someone who bought it handed Baena, put it on in the car and told the driver to just drive on until he was through listening. Quite surreal—cruising Cebu to the sound of Gilopez.

Among those present were Boots Bauer with his wife Romani and their twin sons, Juanin and Marquez; Marco Polo execs Luis Constantino and Tess Catipay; Arts Council VP Maxwell [illegible]; couple Ladies Seno and Angeline [illegible] with son Dr. Chris [illegible] and their friends from New York—Mr. and Mrs. [illegible].

Also in the audience were Lianne's grandma Carmen Rodriguez de Martinez, her mom Josie M. Sala, sister Roche Sala, aunt Delang Rodriguez de Larrazabal, and cousin Ram Rodriguez.

Moms Ines Dr. Ernesto Javier [illegible] and Teresita Javier recalling how as seniors they swooned when Gilopez came to play at their school; Ompapa [illegible] Renato and Joy [illegible] Jude [illegible] and Bobi [illegible] who had interviewed the Kabayaos for his widely viewed TV show.

Far and away: A destination wedding in Bali

WITH RELATIVES and friends

By Bey M. Nan
Contributor

THE IDEA of a destination wedding is romantic, exciting and exotic, and that was exactly what Marcus Ng and Marjorie Dy had in mind when they set their sights on Bali as location for their wedding.

Before 146 of their closest family and friends, the couple exchanged vows at the cresting site of Tirtha Luhur in Uluwatu, Bali. With breathtaking views, wide vistas of sky and sea, Tirtha Luhur was the perfect choice for Marcus and Marjorie.

Officiating at the ceremony was Msgr. Esteban Lo, a longtime friend of the bride's family. Standing as sponsors were ex-Chief Justice Artemio V. Panganiban and his wife Elenita C. Panganiban, Sr. Sy Hong C. Dy, Lydia Sy, Wilson Lim Sy, Luis Chan, DC Wenjen Lim, Frederick Dy, Evelyn Dy, Esther Tiong, Alfonso Tiosec and Vivian Tiosec, Jerome Tang and Margarita Tang.

Marjorie was beautiful in an ivory off-the-shoulder gown by Jun Escario. Looking out at all terraces, she walked down the aisle preceded by two Balinese ladies throwing flower petals as Marcus looked on teary-eyed.

Before proceeding to the reception, guests made sure to snap a lot of pictures with the couple in this gorgeous location.

The reception was at Nawasi

THE BRIDE and groom

MR. NG Meng Tian and Ms Criselda T. Ng

Nusa Dua, just 40 minutes away. Guests were served a sumptuous meal of ginger tiger prawns and marinated prawns with green papaya salad as appetizer; pumpkin veloute soup with grilled chicken in lemongrass skewer; and a fine entree of grilled barracuda fish with seafood tagliatelle in parmesan sauce.

The main course of beef tenderloin with potato dauphinoise gratinee was followed by a dessert buffet of chocolate lava cake, panna cotta, fresh fruits, macaroons and slices of the couple's own wedding cake.

Doing a very able job of emceeing the night's program were the couple's friends—Chen Ansena and Patrick Tiongjongco. The evening was made more enjoyable by the couple's friends who stayed on till the wee hours to toast to their health and happiness.

Photographer Ole Bais and Miguel Yeban captured the unique and wonderful moments of the special day.

As their wedding coordinator, I had the pleasure of working closely with Marjorie and Marcus before and during the wedding. It gave me great satisfaction to see that all our hard work translated to a celebration that was meaningful and memorable for everyone.

My husband had an affair with my close friend

EMILY'S POST

Emily A. Marcelo

DEAR EMILY,

I caught my husband having an affair with a friend of mine. Caught not in a flagrant way—but more like solving a puzzle.

She was my friend from college and we considered ourselves close. She'd go to my house and I'd go to hers. My children even called her "Auntie." She never had kids of her own. She separated from her husband 22 years into their marriage and that brought us closer.

That was the time when my husband started a small community effort to help the poor and she, being a social worker, was tapped to help him. The two of them traveled frequently, sometimes alone but oftentimes with others. I myself was too busy with my work to think about their progress.

Call it a wife's intuition, but I knew something was going on between them. My friend suddenly became very unavailable to me. She was always too busy to meet or talk to me when before, we'd be at each other's side, wanting to know everything that was happening to the other.

Then, my husband, who was the epitome of cool and disinterest—who would only talk of work and everything else except home life—was suddenly very attentive, very affectionate and very involved in what I and the kids were doing. Our sex life even rendered. What has for years become a big yawn became more perfectly frequent. I welcomed it, of course! I was thrilled but, at the same time, perplexed. I even joked to my sister that if my husband were having an affair—I'd like to thank the other woman for making me feel sexy again.

I truly didn't feel bad about my friend. Annoyed, and a bit of wounded pride, but not angry. She didn't try to steal my husband, or break up our family or cause embarrassment for him or me by flaunting their affair, as some brazen ones have done. There were no calls in the night, no excuses from my husband to spend the weekend away or disappear for a sudden "emergency" on a red-letter date like Valentine's Day. Not even her birthday was made "sacred."

I've known her to be very vulnerable and my husband, being a man, went along and filled up her need. She was a fun person, usually and I can't blame him for being attracted to her. Had I confronted them—as so many [illegible] go—I probably would have driven my husband to the wall and lost him completely.

Their affair lasted over two years. My friend left for abroad and didn't come home until a few years later, already married to an old beau. And my husband (surprise!) went back to his old ways. Gone were our sudden romantic spur-of-the-moment out-of-town trips, the renewed teenage stolen kisses here and there, the unexpected bouquet of flowers.

Now I am part of the furniture again.

Truth to tell, there was nothing exciting about my marriage by that time. Thus, I cannot credit my friend even if I wanted to. I myself have fantasized about the men I've met, and imagined the sins I wanted to commit with them. Didn't the Bible say "If you can think it, you can do it?" Same difference, as a cousin would say.

We're all getting old now and somehow, I miss my friend back. I want her to know that although she did me wrong, I never harbored ill will toward her. She did my marriage good and, despite how the common mind would mock, I'm happy because through her, I experienced a truly wonderful sexual revival, on my road to retirement, however warped it may have been.

—Crazy Housewife

Are you for real? You must be a disciple of Warren Buffett's wife, who gave her blessing to the old billionaire to go live with his new love without having to divorce her! She even told her children and friends that if that was going to be a problem with them, they should go into psychoanalysis! I thought that was such a civilized arrangement. And whatnotness?

Now back to you. Though you will never be canonized for this act of bravery, you definitely gave civility and sophistication a good name.

Your friend clearly respected both you and your long friendship together. The fact that no scandal transpired was proof of that. Clearly these things happen to the best of us because, really, oftentimes people are just too human to fend off temptations of the flesh.

IBM turns 100

IBM IN THE PHILIPPINES JOINS other IBM offices around the world for the company's centenary celebrations. Marking the 100-year anniversary of its founding on June 16, 1911 with a year-long initiative, IBM is engaging local communities and thought leaders with a series of activities themed around changing the way the world works.

"IBM in the Philippines will turn 75 years in 2012 thanks to Thomas Kevin Mullen, an Irishman and Ernesto D. Guzman, a Filipino who organized and incorporated Watson Business Machines (WBM) with the Securities and Exchange Commission on July 29, 1937 with an initial capitalization of Php 25,200.00," said James Velasquez, Country General Manager, IBM Philippines. "To mark our history in the region and to show our commitment in the future expansion of our business, we will celebrate IBM's Centennial in the Philippines with a number of activities including a Day of Service for the community in June where our employees will have the opportunity to apply their business skills and work experiences to address local critical community challenges and societal needs."

Velasquez' sentiments followed those of IBM's Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer, Samuel J. Palmisano who said recently, "Over the course of the last century, information technology has gone from a set of tools... to an industry... to a science... to a pervasive aspect of the modern world."

Throughout its century of existence, IBM has played a leading role in transforming business, science and society. These areas form the basis for the three themes driving IBM's Centennial: Reinventing the Modern Corporation, Pioneering the Science of Information and Making the World Work Better. Together they provide a basis for understanding how the rise of information technology has changed society and the world.

IBM started off making clocks, scales and cheese slicers, in addition to the punched-card tabulator. [illegible] magnetic tape, the first disk drive, the memory chip, FORTRAN, barcodes, ATMs, mainframes, minicomputers and personal computers. More recently, IBM has become known for its leadership in the area of supercomputers, services, software, and business analytics.

With 400,000 employees working in over 170 countries, IBM is focused on helping its clients and ultimately the world become better. To know more about IBM and be part of its growth, visit http://www-07.ibm.com/employment/ph/ or www.facebook.com/myIBM.

An Urban Utopia comes to Life

By Paul Romero

In Cebu, a new residential address—rising within the city's most prime spot—is shaping up to be the next luxury dwelling of note.

If you were to retrace Cebu's footsteps 400 years back to its birth as an iconic historical landmark to its present state as a sprawling mass of urbanization, you are able to chart its evolution from a mere island province to a key growth center. As it had attracted a good handful of milestones that helped define what it is today, it has also lured the country's largest and only full-line property developer Ayala Land, Inc. (ALI).

Ayala Land makes known its commitment to transforming Cebu into one of the country's newest and most prime business and lifestyle hubs. Locally, Cebu's allure and charm is hard to ignore. It has long been recognized as a melting pot of different cultures, a destination religious and historical significance, and an exciting mecca of recreation, leisure and lifestyle.

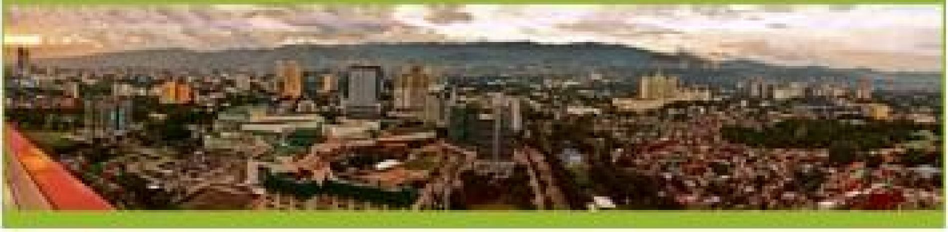

Across the shores, Cebu maintains its status as an important regional tourism and trade hub—reason enough why it easily remains connected to Southeast Asia, and the rest of the world as well. Given all these, in addition to Cebu's vital economic role in the South, Ayala Land easily comes into the picture as its most formidable investor. And it all begins right at a 50-hectare parcel of land called the Cebu Business Park (CBP), but more commonly known as Ayala Center.

Cebu's growth has so much to do with its strategic geographical location. It is literally right at the center of it all; no wonder it is the Queen City of the South. And, as Ayala Land remains at the helm of growth as it continues to envision progressive mixed-use communities of note—it has been behind its highly successful development of the Makati Central Business District, Bonifacio Global City and Nuvali, to name a few—it has chosen Cebu to be the next big thing.

Ayala Land's investment in the upscale Cebu Business Park is a milestone in its reputation as a provider of its trademark live-work-play environments. In 1994, Ayala Center Cebu opened its doors and transformed Cebu into a serious shopping destination for locals and foreigners alike. Its foot traffic now reaches a whopping 200,000-mark each weekend.

The eventual opening of the Cebu City Marriott Hotel has greatly complimented the shopping mall's existence, luring even more visitors and investors to the city. Cebu's prominence as the new residential address of choice is evidenced by condominiums and apartments that have established Cebu Business Park as an enclave of cosmopolitan, high-rise living. Amenities like the City Sports Club Cebu offers leisure as a daily way of life.

As the name behind leading and emerging business districts all over the country, Ayala Land harnesses its power to build right from the very land that inspires it. And, as a strategic growth center welcoming change, Cebu is all set to deliver a new generation of homes built on Ayala Land's unwavering commitment to excellence.

1016 Residences-The most preferred address

The evolving Ayala landscape continues to give birth to new names—One Serendra, Montecito, Alvis and Santhera, all in Nuvali—which have become buzzwords in prime residential living.

But things in Cebu will be different. When Ayala Land Premier's newest property development opens its doors to welcome its residents and tenants, there will be no words available—literally—to christen or describe it with, as it adds itself to the Cebu skyline. Welcome to 1016 Residences by Ayala Land.

This new 2,400 square meter high rise will feature two- and three bedroom units reflecting the Ayala trademark leisure-inspired building architecture and ambiance. Great attention to detail is also evident, with Ayala Land Premier's deliberate intent to focus on interior space planning, with the addition of exquisite finishes. Amenities include a wooden deck and lounging areas, complemented by the development's exceptional location, where business, institutional, retail, dining and recreational amenities are just a few minutes away.

strongly affirms Ayala Land's commitment to further expansion and growth beyond Luzon. It redefines Cebu's real estate scene with a luxury address Cebuanos have long been dreaming of.

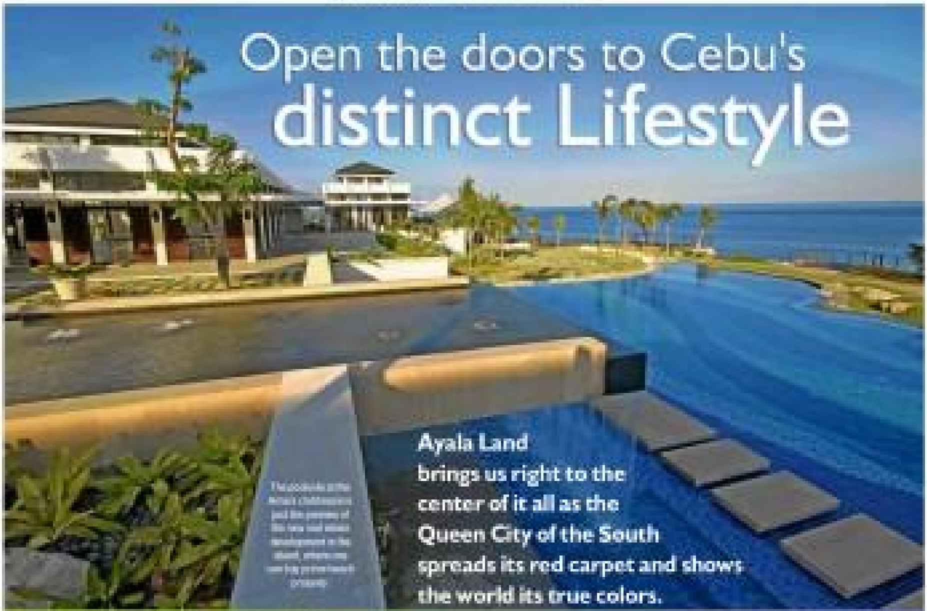

"Cebu is such a big metropolitan city and is fast becoming a true global city, so we are confident that its upscale market will appreciate this one-of-a-kind type of luxurious residential product option," says Bobby Dy, Residential Business Group Head.

Cebu's transition into the newest upscale residential landmark is just beginning.

"True to the overall vision of Ayala Land Premier, 1016 Residences will rise within the heart of Cebu's Central Business District, taking advantage of its prime location and emphasizing its direct access to a full range of retail, dining, and recreational amenities," adds Dy.

1016 Residences, which highlights a quaint country club feel, amplified and complemented by its design, is set to deliver 108 units by the third quarter of 2014, thereby raising the bar on prime luxury living in the Queen City of the
